

How to Prevent an Online Dating Experience Failure

How to Prevent an Online Dating Experience Failure

Want to know the people with most successful online dates? Well, these are people who know how to talk to people, who maximize their dating potentials, who check the Internet and connect with others regularly.

But for many other members of online dating sites, it seems that getting a chance to hook up with someone is zilch. What most people post in their ads on the Internet actually don't help them. It's the other way around.

If you do the things below, then say goodbye to your potential mate.

1. Choosing a lewd user name

Online dating sites generally put the user name that you have in your profile. So, if your user name is "nastybabe69" or "hungrywolfXXX," then chances are, you won't find a long-lasting mate. Unless, of course, you really want losers slamming you with emails.

2. No partner requirements

What you seek for a mate says a lot about you. If you are not stating your requirements you leave yourself wide open for all personality types, specifically undesirable ones.

3. No photo

Many online dating members have photos in their profiles. If you don't have a photo in your personal profile, then your ad will be most likely discarded.

4. Don't email or reply prospective mates

Many

online dating sites enable you to send a message to a prospective mate. You can also get a message from someone who is interested in you. You could also send other expressions signifying interest like virtual kisses or smiles. Don't write nor reply to them. Someone might take interest in you. You don't want that to happen, don't you?

5. Keep your ad bare

If

your ad is almost empty to carry additional information about you that might interest people or it is too general, it would be better leave it at that. Making a good, detailed ad might give you positive results.

6. Do not go to the website &ndash; ever again

After

you have put your online ad, never come back to the site again. Do not even attempt to check the emails from the site announcing that it got several choices for you. After posting the ad, forget coming back to the website again. Otherwise, you might be tempted to see that someone might be actually interested in knowing you better.

If you got all six of these guidelines, you do not have to worry in getting successful online dating. Ever.

About The Author:

Lawrence

Andrews is an ePublisher, software developer, consultant, and author of numerous books. Visit his Private Label Content and Software site at <http://www.lmamedia.com> for more information about Dating Do's and Dont's.

You may use this article freely on your website as long as this resource box is included, a link point back to my site, and this article remains unchanged! Copyright 2005 Lawrence Andrews